What is the Student Fee Review Board?

The Student Fee Review Board (SFRB) oversees the allocation of $68 million in student fees. Student activity fees fund 19 different fee funded areas including the Lory Student Center, Campus Recreation, the Health and Medical Center, the University Facility Fee, Athletics, and many more.

SFRB acts as the student voice to the Colorado State University’s President and Board of Governors in consideration of fee requests. Student representatives on SFRB learn in detail about the many services offered by the fee-funded areas, assess each area’s budget, and provide feedback about the use of the services offered and proposed by each area. It is the responsibility of SFRB to ensure that students’ money is effectively and responsibly allocated to benefit students.

SFRB is a year-long volunteer commitment entailing approximately 1-2 hours per week beginning mid-Fall semester.
